Q: .htaccess not redirecting to new domain My problem is that I have a website that is all indexed and everything but for some reason the .htaccess file is not redirecting. I'm trying to figure out why but so far it's not working. There is a problem that causes it not to work but that doesn't get displayed when you use a notepad so it's quite hard to debug Could it be that its the fault of some other .htaccess file that is redirecting? Specific detection of endogenous telomerase activity in cells from patients with acute myelogenous leukemia. Telomerase activity, defined as the ability to synthesize telomeric DNA, is detected in proliferating cells in humans and in most of the tumor cells. It has been suggested that telomerase is a common target for cancer therapy. However, most of the known leukemia cells, including those from patients with acute myelogenous leukemia (AML), do not express telomerase activity. We are developing an assay for the specific detection of endogenous telomerase activity in cells from patients with AML. In our assay, Epstein-Barr virus-immortalized B cells were transformed by a fusion of the hTERT gene driven by a viral promoter with an interleukin-2 receptor promoter, resulting in IL-2-dependent immortalized cells. The cells were transfected with a telomerase DNA expression construct containing human telomerase RNA genes. We demonstrated that this method can detect endogenous telomerase activity in cells from patients with AML. The human telomerase RNA gene in the transfection plasmid is expressed in a detectable amount in the transfected IL-2-dependent IM9 cells. We found that there was an inverse correlation between the quantity of total RNA purified from the transfected IM9

cells and the copy number of the plasmid
