-Expand into new worlds in time -Get your party ready to go
-Get out there and explore the new worlds -Die and lose everything? PS: It is recommended that you have 2 controllers to play this game, 1 for you and one for your friend to play with. Have fun. A: Zxill: A Legend of Time is not available on the Wii or PS3 according to the Wikipedia article. You could try World of Legend: Zxill. The game is hosted in this Youtube video. Q: Firebase user auth with custom authentication I'm trying to find out how to use different auth providers in Firebase. I have two apps, one app authenticates the user with Google and the second app authenticates the user with Facebook. Both of them work fine. I would like to use the Firebase accounts from these apps to go to my third app, which requires a username and password. I want it to authenticate with Facebook (username / password). So I guess I need to somehow wrap Firebase on top of Android's AccountManager and allow it to use two providers. What would be the best way to do that? A: You can't, at least not directly. Firebase authenticates with third parties via OAuth, which can only do a single authentication step at a time. There's no way to decouple that single authentication step. If you have two providers that can only do a single authentication, your options are: Use one provider, and fall back to the other provider after failure. This would be the typical "one app per user" strategy. Use one provider as the primary, and the other as the fallback, when it's needed. When the user logs in with one provider, I'd suggest just storing user information that you need in the case of a second authentication. Your third app just uses Firebase to check that information is present in the database and then uses that for authentication. You can see sample authentication strategies in the samples project in your SDK's GitHub repository. [Endoscopic management of post-tonsillectomy hemorrhage: a retrospective series of 107

This game utilizes VR controllers with body tracking and non-verbal communication. Morphing is enabled in order to create a more immersive gaming experience. Any thoughts, comments, or suggestions? I really like the concept of this game, and the creativity. One suggestion, I'm assuming you've had some people try to put the controller in their mouth and play with it that way - make sure it doesn't move around, or you have some sort of control that keeps it still, because that's what most people will do. Sorry for the late reply, I wasn't on my computer. I guess I need to make it a little more detectable with something like a paw. I really like the concept of this game, and the creativity. One suggestion, I'm assuming you've had some people try to put the controller in their mouth and play with it that way - make sure it doesn't move around, or you have some sort of control that keeps it still, because that's what most people will do. I agree, a few of my friends have tried to do this. What I've found is that the controllers are amazingly durable, and since I had no problem going into a dentist's office with controllers on when I had an appointment, I decided to try it at home and took a deep breath and....well, the controllers lasted about 5 minutes and I realized I had to come up with something else to keep it. So I started looking at the backs of the controllers, and found a white silicone USB connector that fits perfectly in the center hole of the controllers, but then I thought about the controllers being positioned in my mouth, and it was just too uncomfortable for me, because I could feel the filling in my back teeth, and I felt really weird like that was happening. So, if you'd like to find a way to completely prevent people from putting them in their mouth, I'd suggest a silicone tether that goes from the controller to your hand, but it would have to be with some sort of other non-silicone insulation. What I've found is that the controllers are amazingly durable, and since I had no problem going into a

What's new:

The Pit is the final chapter of the Heart of Gold expansion for Stellaris. It is a hub world designed to emulate aspects of No Man's Sky, the original Terran space exploration game from SkyBox Labs. Like No Man's Sky, this is a planetary sandbox with very precise movement feedback. It has three stages: solar system discovery, planetary inward colonization and galactic civilization.

Contents Overview

Discovering the Fan The Fan is the caretakers of a civilization. Fan lives to protect their Planet, which means protecting it from others. Every approaching ship is treated with suspicion, and every encroaching colony is eradicated.

Discovering the Core The Core is the first planet discovered by the Behemath. It is the first planetary body of full natural-habitable mass to be found within the region of space which the Behemath can navigate with their Omnibulator.

Navigating the Heart of Gold The Heart of Gold is the second planet discovered by the Behemath. It is very sparsely populated, capable of supporting just two species: the loving Fan and the thriving Core.

Inward-Colonizing

The Pit Beneath the surface of The Pit is an ancient, mysterious vault. The Behemath dare to venture there only on barge-haul missions, because it is so dangerous, so unexplored.

Galactic Civilization The Fan and the Core achieve Galactic Civilisation after their homeworlds' founding races settled in nearby star systems, and they reached the first contact with the Glorious Horde and discovered they share a common enemy. For expansion purposes, technological discovery stages must be ordered. The discovery of the Fan and the Core must be followed by the discovery of the Fan Centaurium and the Core Trollium. Each star system must be discovered by the Behemath before they can be colonised. This should be done in reverse order so that Star systems are discovered before the discovery of Star Systems within them.

Anomaly Su-23 At two solar masses, Bet S W S A is a gas giant. It is particularly inhospitable to life, being hellish to microbes and even to the behemaths, who need an atmosphere to survive. But the planet has a secret: there is a large, mineral-rich lake at the centre. That the lake does not float away is a mystery. The layout of the planet is reminiscent of
